The Impact of IEP Team Composition and Transition Planning: Upon the Success of Students with Disabilities in Urban Schools (Paperback)

By Petrina D Hill, Dr Petrina D Hill

ASA Publishing Company, United States, 2013. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 279 x 216 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .The primary purpose of this correlation study was to examine the impact of IEP team composition (team member attendance) and transition planning (types of transition outcomes) upon the success (graduation) of students with disabilities in urban districts. Other factors also included gender, academic status of school, socioeconomic status of the students, and age of the students at graduation. Transition is defined as the point at which change occurs in somebody's life (Cimera Rusch, 2000). All humans are affected or impacted by transitions occurring in their lives. Some researchers agree that transition for students with disabilities can be more difficult than transition for students without disabilities, reflecting the need for the participation of students with disabilities in their IEP development specifically transition planning (Cimera Rusch, 2000; Furney Salembier, 2000; Garguilo, 2003; Kohler Chapman, 1999; Martin, Marshall Sale, 2004; Trach Sheldon, 2000; Wagner Blackorby, 1996). Furthermore, planning and implementing transition services for students with disabilities is mandated by federal law. The evidence of transition planning is the development of the transition page of the student's individual...
