Oh! if Fraser had only punched his head that day when he lectured on my boots! He d better look out though--that s all. Madge has worked herself up into a fury, and is pacing the room like a young leopardess in a cage. Somehow she feels as though she were in a cage, or that a cage is growing round her. Look here, Jess, she says, I never cared that (snapping her fingers) for Henry, and to do him justice, I don t believe he ever cared that (snapping them again) for me. He loves to tease, and domineer, and show off, and I got accustomed to it. Why, I was a child when he first came to the Vicarage! I know better now, and, as I told papa only the day before yesterday, I will not stand it. I am engaged to Mr. Fraser Ellicott, and so you can tell all the everybodies who have been so busy about me. I m sure I didn t mean to make mischief, pleads poor Jessie, beginning to cry. Oh! there s no mischief made that I know of. The whole thing is below contempt. The idea of Henry Wybert forming me! Don t cry, dear. I m not angry with you. On the contrary; I m much obliged to you for what you have said. It clears up a good deal that has been puzzling me. There, there! be a good old Jess again;...
