FOREWORD I IT IS only fair to warn the reader at the start that I am no authority on electricity or the production of electric power. I know about as little, technically speaking, of the mysterious force which makes my light shine and my clock tick and my wifes washing machine wash as it is possible for an adult, reasonably educated person to know and still be accepted socially by his fellow man and woman. I do know, however, that it is important that the activities listed above and many other activities of what has quite properly been called The Electric Age should continue unabated and, if...
